A Note from the Community Office

We can change the way we have been responding to life and our everyday issues and conflicts. We can learn Nonviolent Communication (NVC) which is kind of a language of care and compassion and a tool for creating and maintaining calm and peace in our homes, and in our communities. NVC is based on the idea that our actions and behaviours come from us trying to get our needs met. When we ignore our needs, or try to forget them or hide them, they grow bigger.

At our CommuniTEA Time last week, we had a powerful conversation led by NVC facilitator (and Second Street parent) Sahar Sanai. Sahar led us through some of the main concepts of NVC and we learned about the metaphors of the Jackal, and the more connected and positive, Giraffe parenting styles. One thought that especially stuck with me was that Giraffe's long neck enables her to see wide and far, and therefore, consider many possibilities and perspectives. This is a very helpful stance for a parent to take, right?

On Wednesday, March 13, from 9-10:30 am in our Community Room, we will have Sahar back to continue this conversation about using NVC tools in our parenting. We will explore what some children's common behaviours can indicate and how we peacefully handle these situations, even when we (and our kids) are tired and frustrated.

I often imagine the results if we all practiced this kind of behavior, and our children learned this kind of peaceful stance in their relationships with us, and amongst their friends.... What a different world we would have. I love this quote from Marshall Rosenberg:

"Peace requires something far more difficult than revenge or merely turning the other cheek; it requires empathizing with the fears and unmet needs that provide the impetus for people to attack each other. Being aware of these feelings and needs, people lose their desire to attack back because they can see the human ignorance leading to these attacks; instead, their goal becomes providing the empathic connection and education that will enable them to transcend their violence and engage in cooperative relationships."

Please join us at CommuniTEA Time for this time to connect, share and feel supported.

Together Strong,

Gayle Beavil - Community School Coordinator
